We can't breathe life back into the 2,246 fetal remains just discovered at the late Dr. Ulrich (George) Klopfer's home, but we can demand justice for them. We have many questions and we call on Illinois and Indiana authorities to work together to investigate and provide answers. We demand closure for the women who had abortions at Klopfer's facilities.

Oversight laws and regulations exposed Klopfer's sloppy practice and allowed for his license to be revoked. We continue to call for enforcement of regulations for all abortion facilities. In South Bend, the abortion facility that replaced Klopfer's clinic is operating without a license, The State Department of Health refused to grant an abortion license for not being of not of "reputable and responsible character." We need health officials to be able to inspect this facility and ensure women's health is never compromised.

The ultimate justice for these 2,246 would be for their little lives to serve as a catalyst for an end to abortion. These 2,246 lives speak to an abortion industry that cares nothing for human dignity and nothing for the women it alleges to help. These lives show that we can, and must, do better in recognizing the value in every human life.
